THEY"RE BACK! Participants on the week-long Quebec Exchange trip returned to F. G. Miller High on Tuesday, February 13, and were thrilled to be home just in time for the extra long weekend break, which combined Teachers Convention and Family Day to give students five days off -- six for rural students whose buses were cancelled due to icy roads.

Town considers 911 service

Elk Point Town Council heard a presentation regarding the provision of 911 emergency telephone service at their February 12 regular meeting. Laird Burton, manager of Strathcona County Emergency Services, was on hand to explain the service, which would put services such as fire, police and ambulance just a three digit phone call away from local residents. The Town is presently getting clarification on the cost to residents, and will discuss the matter further when this information is obtained.

Crime statistics show decline

Council has received the 1995 year-end report from the Elk Point RCMP Detachment, with many statistics showing a decrease from 1994. These include (1994 figures in brackets): 29 assault (36), 10 break-and-enters (14), 15 motor vehicle accidents (32), 16 criminal code traffic infractions (40), 50 Provincial traffic infractions (99), 30 thefts (23), 53 criminal code charges (44), 3 drug offences (2) and 25 liquor offences (19).

No water bill for Fairgrounds

Recommendations from the Public Works committee were the subject of considerable discussion, especially those dealing with the Agricultural Society Fairgrounds Arena. Council eventually passed a motion agreeing with the committee's recommendation not to charge for water at the fairgrounds, and also to approve a letter of agreement regarding drainage of the site.

In other Public Works matters, Council has set aside $725 to deal with removal of potentially hazardous trees on 50 St. north of 52 Ave., and to provide between $400 and $500 for an enclosure for straying dogs captured by the bylaw enforcement officer.

A resolution was passed adopting the Town's Electrical Quality Management Plan, which is a requirement of the Safety Codes Council.

Three bylaws were given final approval at the meeting; these deal with Relocation and Demolition, Construction of Buildings, and Unsightly Premises.

FCSS budget still waiting for Town Council's approval

Approval of the 1996 FCSS budget and FCSS hours of operation have been tabled to the next meeting of Elk Point Town Council. Council has received a news release regarding changes in FCSS funding, but does not have information to this point on whether this will effect the Town of Elk Point, which opted last year to go to unconditional funding.

FCSS funding will move back to Alberta Family and Social Services as of April 1 from Alberta Municipal Affairs' Unconditional Municipal Grant Program, where it has been funded since March 1994. Alberta Family and Social Services will take over administration of FCSS funding as well as responsibility for the Family and Community Support Services Act. The finalization of administrative details is not expected until further discussion with stakeholders has taken place.

Elk Point FCSS is also currently without a director, Terry Ehlert having resigned from that position. The office is currently open Monday through Thursday mornings, 8:30 a.m. until noon.

RED CROSS KICKS OFF 1996 CAMPAIGN -- Elk Point and District Red Cross got ready for this year's campaign on Friday, when kits were handed out to the volunteer canvassers. Among the volunteers are Hazel Hannah, Barb Anderson, Lois Yaremkevich, Louis Zarowny, Horace Osinchuk, Red Cross Chair Jean McGinnis, and Rob Holliday.

Thunder advance to Provincials

Elk Point Midget Thunder took an easy road to the Provincial tournament in Vauxhall, March 22-24 when their Provincial playoff game against the Saddle Lake Warriors on Thursday night was forfeited due to lack of a goaltender for the Warriors. That's the good news!

Saturday night, the Thunder travelled three hours south in the fog to Consort. You know things are going to be bad when one of your big players misses the bus due to car trouble, and the trainer forgets to put the sharpened skates on the bus. After scrabbling around, the Consort team managed to find enough skates for the Thunder to play the game, but the Thunder was down by three goals before team captain Kristin Holthe scored on the power play with a blistering slapshot. Consort added two more before workhorse Marty Bendixen scored his wraparound goal, also on a power play. Clayton Cardinal added one for for the Thunder

Town Council holds line on waste contract

Council will meet with Russ Kowtun on February 26 for a briefing on Disaster Services.

A letter from Laidlaw Waste Services regarding their contract with the Town was discussed. The Town signed a 5 year contract with Laidlaw in February 1993, which stated that there would be no price increase in that time, but that the contract would be reviewed in three years. Council passed a resolution to continue without an increase.

No response has been received to advertising for three volunteers to sit on the Subdivision Development Appeal Board. At this point, if there were an appeal, there would be no way to deal with it. At least two members of the public must sit on the SDAB, in addition to Council representatives.

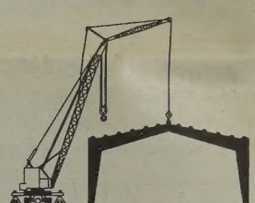
METAL BUILDING ERECTORS



(Pre-engineered metal buildings)

If you erect structural steel for metal buildings, or employ people who erect metal buildings you need to know that:

To continue to erect structural steel for metal building systems after March 31, 1996, you must be a registered apprentice or certified journeyman Ironworker, or a registered apprentice or certified journeyman Ironworker — Metal Building Systems Erector.

You may be eligible for a Journeyman Certificate

If you have more than 4 years and 6000 hours of experience in erecting metal building systems prior to May 15, 1995, you have until March 31, 1996 to submit a completed application for apprenticeship to the office listed below. If, prior to May 15, 1996, you successfully complete a 5 day refresher course and exam, you may be eligible for an Ironworker — Metal Building Systems Erector Journeyman Certificate.

If you do not successfully complete the refresher course and exam by May 15, 1996 you must register as an apprentice and take the 10 week training provided to all other apprentices in the Metal Building Systems Erector branch of the Ironworker trade.

Submit your application to:

Positive discipline starts with a loving relationship

Rick says he'll never forget the first time he used his new video camera. His children were hunting for Easter eggs, and Rick followed them around the house capturing the events on film. Then they sat down after lunch to watch the replay.

"When I heard myself talking to the kids on the video, I was shocked," Rick recalls. "I never realized how many times I yelled, how many times I told the kids they were bad, how often I said no when I didn't really need to. And this was supposed to be a fun time!"

Parents sometimes become so concerned about maintaining discipline and encouraging appropriate behaviors that establishing a strong and loving relationship with their children gets left behind. But that relationship is really the foundation for effective discipline. Children need to feel loved, understood and appreciated by their parents. Those good, secure feelings help them respond positively to your corrections and guidance.

When discipline starts to seem like "a running battle," it can be a sign that the foundation needs more work. Spending more time together — just enjoying each other's company — will sometimes lead to surprising improvements on the "discipline scene."

Here are some ways to build the parent-child relationship:

* Loving Touch. Physical affection — a good-night hug or a close cuddle while you read a story together — is always important to children. If your older child is embarrassed by hugs, show your affection in small ways she's comfortable with, like a pat on the back.

* Time Together. Even a little bit of undivided attention, just with you — perhaps ten minutes while you tuck him into bed — will bring you closer together.

* Respect Your Child's Feelings. Even if they don't make sense to you, they are real to your child.

* Be Trustworthy. If you make a promise — say to take the family swimming tomorrow — do your best to keep it. If you're really not sure, it's better not to promise.

* Apologize. Nobody is perfect! Saying "I'm sorry" when you make a mistake or lose your temper will let you child know you care about her feelings.

* Have Fun Together. When you play together and enjoy each other, you rediscover how special your child is. Those good feelings will help you handle the tough times.

As your child grows, you will connect with your child in different ways:

Babies rely on the sense of tough for much of their learning. When you hold, rock, cuddle and talk to your baby, he feels loved and cared for. You can also show your baby that you care about his feelings by comforting him when he cries.

Toddlers are active explorers ("into everything"), and easily frustrated. You can minimize the number of times you have to say "no" by childproofing your house and removing unbreakable objects. Outings geared to her speed and interest (at this age, a walk to the park on the next block can take an hour!) will give her a chance to explore and learn about the world. A toddler also needs lots of affection and reassurance — part of her is still a baby!

Preschoolers are more verbal: now listening becomes an essential part of your parenting role. If you have more than one child, it might help to set aside a little time for each one to have your undivided attention. Let your child lead the conversation and share his concerns, thoughts or interests with you.

Older children are so busy with school and friends, you may feel left out of your child's life! It can take careful planning to find time for activities that you and your child both enjoy — but even if it's just making a pizza together or chatting while you drive to soccer, that time is invaluable.

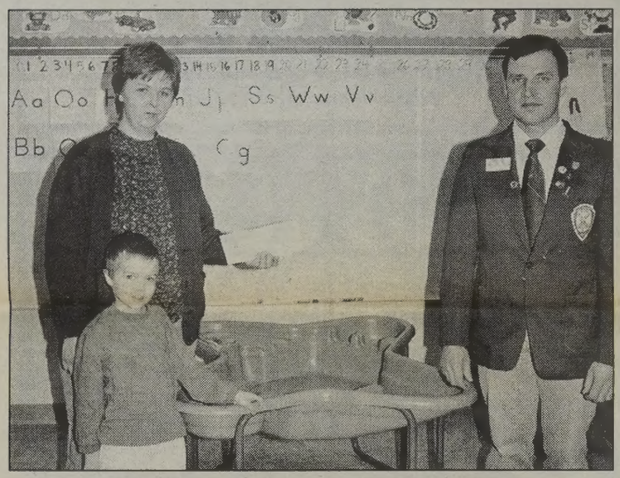
COMPUTER FUN FOR ECS -- was brought about by three kind donations. Greg Fuller, on behalf of E-Can Oilfield Services, presented the Geo Safari Junior, while Carol Lee, on behalf of the Elk Point Lioness Club, presented an updated program for the used computer kindly donated by Sonia and Ted Yarmuch (not shown). Juanita and Alexander Buck accept the donations.



AND MORE FUN COMING UP! -- Randy Ballas of the Elk Point Elks Lodge presented Juanita Buck and son Alexander, on behalf of the ECS class, with a water table and a Learn Around Activity Carpet, both of which will offer hours of fun for the ECS students. Donations from community groups and businesses help to ease the financial strain caused to ECS by funding cutbacks.

THIS IS THE HOUSE THAT NORCEN BOUGHT -- Kevin Casper visited Elk Point Elementary's ECS class recently to present a very handsome dollhouse, which was eagerly accepted by the youngsters. Juanita Buck of the ECS Parents joins the students in thanking Mr. Casper for their exciting new toy, which will give many hours of pleasure.

Surface Rights

Wide range in surface access payments

By the Heavy Crude Council

In the business of agriculture, we as farmers have always been easy price takers. We are told what to pay for our inputs; we are forced to accept a price for our sales. Those who avail themselves of modern marketing techniques tend to break this syndrome and often succeed in obtaining a sale price for their products at a return they could live with. But it will be a long time before this price-taking mindset is turned around.

There has been one traditional area where the farmer is always in control of setting a price for his assets. That is when he came to sell or rent his land. When it came to marketing their land, farmers adopted the same business practice used by apartment or house landlords and sold or rented their farmland for the highest price the market could bear.

In spite of this, when it comes to leasing land for surface access to an oil or gas company, some farmers resort back to the process they use in selling a bushel of grain at the elevator or livestock at the auction mart. They accept a price instead of setting one.

Here within northeastern Alberta we are seeing a wide range of access payments being accepted by farmers for the same type of land. For example, the annual rentals for leasing a well site to oil or gas companies are ranging from over $1000 per acre to as low as $100 or $200 per acre. One has to question why some farmers are prepared to settle for the lower payments when the market could afford much more. One possible reason is because they don't have enough information on which to base their decisions. This doesn't have to be so. Such information is readily available. The Alberta Surface Rights Association regularly publishes compensation settlements from all over Alberta in its newsletter. The newsletter is available to all farmers and other landowners through their local surface rights organizations. The published compensation figures are those negotiated by farmers or rewarded by the Surface Rights Board. The Federation publishes these figures in order to help farmers make informed decisions when granting access to oil and gas companies.

This exchange of information has been so valuable that oil and gas companies are copying this process and are establishing a data base of compensation payments to suit their own purpose. Of course, they will tend to report the lower payments. Their goal is to reduce the level of payments. The settlements reported by the Alberta Surface Rights Federation are the ones considered average or above average in an effort to raise the general level of payments to all farmers.

There is also another difference between the oil and gas industry data base and the information available through surface rights organizations. It costs $3000 per year for unlimited access or $75 per single search to retrieve information from the oil industry data base. To get the information from your local surface rights organization, it is free.

In this area, the Elk Point Surface Rights Association is your local organization. For more information, phone 724-2296.

Young Reader's Choice Award — read the junior nominees

By Michele Duczek
Librarian

A couple of months ago I wrote about the Young Reader's Choice Awards. This is an award given out by the Pacific Northwest Library Association but is chosen by junior readers. Any child wishing to have a vote in a division has to read at least two nominated books in that division or have the book read to them (i.e. at school by a teacher). At that time I talked about the books in the Senior Division because I had received all of them. This week I mention the nominees in the Junior Division that the library has (we are missing only one title). Voting for the award occurs the first half of March so there is still time to read a few of the nominees.

A Taste of Smoke by Marion Dane Bauer. Caitlin's camping trip with her older sister is intruded upon, first by her sister's boyfriend and then by an oddly dressed boy that only Caitlin can see.

Harper & Moon by Ramon Royal Ross. Young Harper may have to face some unpleasant truths concerning his friend, Moon, an older boy with a special kind of magic.

Harris and Me by Gary Paulsen is a rollicking tale of a city kid who spends a memorable summer on the farm with relatives, including the rambunctious and apparently indestructible Harris.

Crazy Lady by Ellen Conley. Maxine is known as the crazy lady and she and her special needs son are often teased by neighborhood children including Vernon. But when Vernon spends some time with them he comes to realize that they are more than just the neighborhood freak show.

A Hero of Lesser Causes by Julie Johnston. Keely is convinced that she is destined to fight for Great Causes but she learns that the fight for lesser causes can be just as hard and just as important. Winner of the Governor General's Award for Text in Children's Literature.

White Lilacs by Carolyn Meyer. The white residents of Dillon plan to raze the black neighborhood to put in a park and relocate its residents. Rose Lee Jefferson finds herself in the middle of the debate of whether or not to go along with this upheaval, or fight.

The Boggart by Susan Cooper. When a mischievous Scottish spirit accidentally finds itself in Toronto, its two new friends must find a way to get this homesick spirit home before its antics end up on tabloid television.

Alien Secrets by Annette Curtis Clause. Puck is on her way to join her parents on Shoon after being expelled from a boarding school on Earth. Hush, a native Shoowa, is returning home in disgrace after a valuable artifact entrusted to his care is stolen. Hush believes that the stolen artifact is hidden somewhere on board ship and Puck is determined to help him.

Sparrow Hawk Red by Ben Mikaelsen. Ricky Diaz learns that his mother's death was no accident — she was murdered by drug dealers. When his father, an ex-Drug Enforcement agent, refuses a mission for the DEA, young Ricky sneaks across the border into Mexico and, posing as a ratero (street child) attempts to complete the mission and avenge his mother's death.

Winter Camp by Kirkpatrick Hill. A young brother and sister find themselves stranded at an isolated trapping camp during a frigid cold spell with a seriously injured adult.

Heart smart in Heinsburg

By Fiona Daniels
Heinsburg Student Journalist

On Friday, February 2, Heinsburg School Phys Ed. classes had a visitor from the Fit For Life program from the Recreation Department at Lakeland College. The aerobics instructor, Judy, gave 30 minute step aerobics presentations to classes in our school from Grades 1 to 12.

At first, some students were hesitant about trying the workout, but once they started, they really enjoyed it.

Here are some student comments:

"At first I thought I wouldn't like it, but after we started, I loved it. I really like the steps we did, and the music"

"At first I was mad that we were not playing floor hockey, but then when we started I had fun."

"I thought it was fun, it was a good workout. I wish we got to do that for Phys Ed. all the time."

All of the students who participated in this presentation encourage other young people to try step aerobics. "It's a fun way to stay in shape. It doesn't get boring like other exercises do."
